Figure 1: Schematic representation of the experimental design. The diagram illustrates the timeline of events for two groups: Control and Experimental. The timeline is divided into three main sections: Pre-stimulus, Stimulus, and Response. In the Pre-stimulus section, the Control group shows a response time (RT) and the Experimental group shows a response time. In the Stimulus section, the Control group shows a stimulus duration and the Experimental group shows a stimulus duration. In the Response section, the Control group shows a response duration and the Experimental group shows a response duration. The Control group's response time is significantly faster than the Experimental group's response time.
