I charge you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that, although you may believe from all the evidence in this case that the death of the decedent in this case was caused by some act of the defendant, yet you cannot find him guilty of murder in the second degree, unless you, and each of you, should further believe from the evidence, beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, that such act was inflicted with the intention to kill the decedent, or unless the defendant intended to do an act of violence from which ordinarily, in the usual course of events, death or great bodily harm might have been the consequence.

3. 2673

I charge you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that the defendant cannot be convicted of murder in the second degree unless he inflicted an act of violence upon the decedent which produced his death, and at the time he inflicted such act he had the intention to kill him, or intended to do an act of violence from which ordinarily, in the usual course of events, death or great bodily harm might have been the consequence.
