Handwriting practice paper for cursive letters and numbers. The page is divided into two columns. Each column contains a solid example of a character at the top, followed by a dotted version for tracing. The left column contains letters A through Z and numbers 1 through 0. The right column contains letters A through Z and numbers 1 through 0. The characters are arranged in a grid-like fashion, with each character occupying a specific space defined by dashed lines.

A 10x10 grid of dots. A wavy line starts near the top left and moves towards the center. Several small black dots are scattered across the grid, including one near the top left, one near the top center, one near the center, one near the bottom left, and one near the bottom right.
